Excerpt: .the gentle clasp of Sadie Patten s tack-nails, and leaning over from the tops of the windows as if already tired of the sun and wanting a little rest. Well, let s see your hammer. No, I m using it, I m a young lady now and do as I please, cried Mary, springing up from the kitchen hearth, and scattering her walnuts broadcast, catch me if you can. Is that so? Well, then, now for a race from here to the sweet-apple tree. One, two, three, begin! And Preston started off at the top of his speed, Mary just before him; her face aglow, her hair streaming in the wind. As she skimmed over the ground, shouting and laughing, she seemed for all the world like a little girl, and not in the least like a young lady. She was soon caught and obliged to surrender the hainmer, whereupon Preston nailed the curtains neatly, and went whistling about the house, giving finishing touches here and there to the rickety furniture. O thank you. You ve been a great help. Now, in return, you shall have a spring-bed to sleep on, the only one we have in the house, said Lucy, with a mischievous glance at Sadie. The spring-bed did not fit the bedstead, and the chances were that it might fall through in the night. You re too tremendously kind, too selfsacrificing, said Preston, suspecting at once that something was wrong. But he...
