Excerpt: .of travel, fine old pictures, libraries stocked with books, and cabinets and tables laden with bric-a-brac and statuary of historic or legendary lore. There was a brick from the great wall of China and a wonderful Chinese god with six arms and innumerable legs; this piece was a valuable bronze. Then there were souvenirs of the palace in Pekin, and various interesting relics of Buddhist legends and faith from far off Calcutta and the Himalayas. Colonel O'Brien used to say with a laugh that some people say there never was a Chinese wall; but he was an eye-witness to its existence, having once on a bright morning enjoyed a breakfast on top of it. A few choice friends had entree to the O'Brien home on Esplanade avenue. A visit after the breakfast hour recalled the pictures that Dickens drew of the Cheeryble...
